HOUSEPLANTS

that are nearly impossible to kill

Aloe Vera

We dare you to try and kill this plant. You could go months without watering it, yet it doesn't seem to care. Plus, if you burn yourself, the gel from the inside of the leaves works like magic.

Pothos

This seems to be everyone's go-to plant. It's green, lush and very forgiving when you forget to water it. Not at all temperamental, it's just a happy, go-lucky plant, truly low maintenance.

Snake Plant

It's a cool looking plant with a modern vibe (hence the cool name). Speaking of names, it's other one is Mother-in-law's tongue. That's not at all insulting, right? The great thing about this plant is that it is nearly indestructible, just don't excessively water this one, less is more! FYI, this one can be toxic to cats, as with all plants check any plant you buy for its safety with pets.

ZZ Plant

Who wouldn't like a plant named after a 80's rock band. Ok, the ZZ technically stands for Zamioculcas zamiifolia, but who can pronounce it? It's at the top of list because it grows fast and it doesn't need a lot of light to thrive. Win-win!

Peace Lily

It's almost like this plant can talk! If it is thirsty, it just goes limp, like a tired kid that is just "done" with walking. Which means you simply need to pay a little bit of attention to it and wait for the drooping, then water it thoroughly. Easy peasy.

Another cool thing about the Peace Lily!

It has been identified by NASA as an amazing air cleaner!

Jade Plant

This hearty succulent has a reputation for bringing good fortune to its owner, so buy two! The dark green, smooth leaves add lots of intense color to a home. Be careful about moving them around, they like sunlight but not too much!

Prayer Plant

This plant folds up its leaves every night, like it is going to sleep! Keep it in a warm room as it is a rain forest plant, but keep it away from direct sun. Other than those two tips, this one is fairly easy to keep alive.
